

Assessing 21st Century Skills

While there is a perception that employers want directly applicable skills, the reality is that most employers increasingly want (<http://chronicle.com/article/Giving-Employers-What-They/139877>) 21st century skills. We've selected five skills from the list (http://www.imls.gov/about/21st_century_skills_list.aspx) to focus on:

- Critical thinking, creativity, innovation, and problem solving
- Financial, economic, business, and entrepreneurial literacy
- Flexibility, adaptation, initiative, and self-direction
- Social, collaborative, and cross-cultural skills
- Leadership and responsibility

Come up with a way in which technology can be used to more effectively assess and measure on or more of these skills.